Stories and Myths

The Bornholm artist Ane Cecilie Mogensen has interpreted some of the tales of the subterraneans in three stamps:

The Mermaid with Bonavedde in her belly; Unlike ordinary people, Bonavedde can see and hear the subterraneans on account of his maternal origins. Bonavedde and the subterraneans are in the meantime in a perpetual feud with one another.

The mound; where the subterraneans reside: The subterraneans live in the mounds. When they party, the mound rises up on four glowing columns, and you can see the creatures dancing around to strange melodies and rhythms. Unfettered drunkenness and wild behavior are the order of the day.

Ellestingeren, the king of the subterraneans, who rides a three-legged (headless) horse at the head of the underground army. With casual indifference, he casts spells and curses to the right and to the left. Everyone gets what they deserve, and Ellestingeren forgets no-one.

Remarkable women

Historically, women all over the world have often been denied the same attention and recognition as their male colleagues.

For no other reason than that they were women, and because history tends to be written by men.

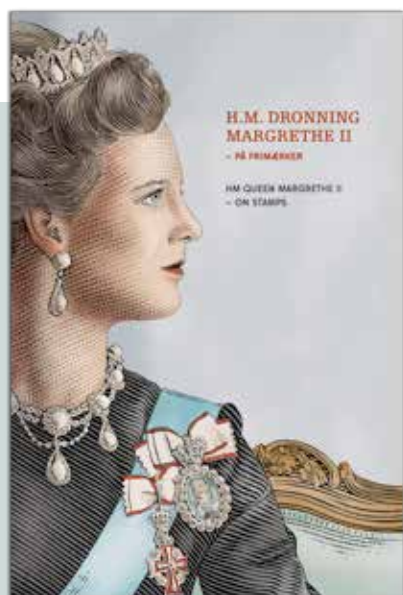

With this stamp issue, PostNord is paying tribute to ten Danish women who have all made a significant mark in their chosen fields. Everything from science and politics to gender equality, business and sport.

Thit Thyrring is the artist behind the colourful portraits.
